ABSTRACT

This briefly annotated bibliography of selected children's books and recordings is a salute to the International Year of the Child. Included in its listings is a section highlighting some translations and representative publications from other countries; these depict a range of mores from Edwardian England to that of the Aborigines of Australia. A list of titles by category is followed by a full bibliographic description and annotation for each title in the main body of the work, which is also arranged by category. Minority cultures are well represented, as are books with non-sexist themes; perennial favorites are also mentioned. The 17 categories presented include picture books for preschoolers, picture books for older children, picture book folk and fairy tales, folk and fairy tales, easy-to-read books, stories, stories for older children, holiday stories and songs, poetry, the performing arts, pastimes, designers and builders, nature and science, many people/many ways, background readings on children and literature, new editions and reprints, and recordings. A title/author index is also provided. (JD)

Children's Books and Recordings, 1978:
A Salute to the International Year of the Child

"Children's books keep alive a sense of nationality. . .they also keep alive a sense of humanity. . .describe faraway lands where unknown brothers live. . .each of them is a messenger that goes beyond mountains and rivers, beyond the seas, to the very ends of the world in search of new friendships." This selection from the words of the French scholar, Paul Hazard, in his work, Books, Children and Men (The Horn Book, 1944) exemplifies the spirit of this year's bibliography in its salute to the child and the universality of childhood as evidenced in children's books around the world.

Unfortunately, since this is a selective list, titles highlighted are only a sampling of the translations and representative publications from other countries. To indicate their representation on this bibliography, a prefatory listing, Books and Recordings Reflecting Other Cultures: A Title Listing, appears before the regular subject headings in the text. These titles, with full bibliographic description and annotations later appear in their proper places in the body of the bibliography. They depict a range of mores from Edwardian England to that of the Aborigines of Australia. As we approach 1979, specific trends in the publications for children are worthy of note. There is an abundance of picture books for the very young child, suitable for sharing or reading aloud, and an equal number of illustrated books for older children, distinguished from the others only by their subtle complexities in theme or text. Nonsense abounds in the Poetry section and ranges from the traditional nonsense of Edward Lear in The Pobble Who Has No Toes to the modern ridiculous verses of Canadian poet, Dennis Lee, in the book Garbage Delight and on the record, Alligator Pie.

Minority cultures in the United States, particularly that of the Native Americans, are well represented in the literature this year, and the trend in non-sexist themes continues in books with women and girls as heroes. Mindful of Hazard's observation that children often reject books which adults select for them, we have been careful to highlight fresh new versions of perennial favorites which children over the years have claimed as their own, such as Robert Louis Stevenson's, A Child's Garden of Verses, with the pleasing illustrations of Erik Blegvad, Tales from the Arabian Nights, with paintings by Ed Young and Cinderella, with Paul Galdone's humorous illustrations.

The growing interest in children's literature is apparent from the titles cited in Background Readings on Children and Literature, which include among them a book of serious and critical essays by educators and creators of children's books about current theories on children's reading, entitled The Cool Web, and the handsome tome in appreciation of the works of the nineteenth-century illustrator, Randolph Caldecott.

We have always celebrated what Paul Hazard termed the "universal republic of childhood;" the International Year of the Child merely heightens our focus.

It is hoped that parents and children will come to browse and select for reading the many books mentioned in the bibliography when they are on exhibition during the months of December and January in the Central Children's Room at the Donnell Library Center, 20 West 53rd Street. Children are encouraged to make their own selections throughout the year from collections in their neighborhood branches or at the Central Children's Room.

The resources of the Central Children's Room are available to parents, teachers, students of children's literature, and to children. The exhibition of books in this bibliography will be open to readers on Mondays from 12:30 p.m. to 8 p.m.; on Tuesdays through Fridays, from 12:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.; on Saturdays, from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

The printing of this list was made possible through the fund raising efforts of the Friends of Children's Services of The New York Public Library.

Children's Books and Recordings, 1978, is published by the Office of Children's Services of The New York Public Library.
